A system of open spaces in Mechelen: Grotemarkt, Veemarkt, Lamot site

A public, multifunctional, collective and mainly pedestrian space has to be open to different formal and informal practices and to unexpected interpretations. It is a space where to stay, to walk, to shop, to get a coffee, flâner, where to do the weekly market and many other collective practices.

Three main themes are afforded by our project. How to design the link between an underground parking and a major square as a fluid, legible and comfortable public space; how to combine cars and busses flows with the pedestrian character of a central space; how to define a meaningful urban grammar and syntax, strongly contemporary but attentive to the presence of an important past.

Our design is inspired by the idea that a public space needs to be "not over designed"; that in the thick layering of the old city a new design must be strongly contemporary although minimal.
